NEW YORK, July 15.—As the Lamport & Holt steamship Vauban was coming up the coast about 8 a. m. yesterday, the ship's surgeon, Dr. S. A. Davis, filed in the number of second cabin passengers as 143, completed his bill of health, then sealed the document to be turned over to port officials.

About that time the physician was called to the cabin of Mrs. Justa Ruiz, of Argentina. He helped a new born boy to board the vessel, then reopened his bill of health, set down 144 as the number of second cabin passengers, and once more sealed the papers. At 11:30 a. m. he was called again to Mrs. Ruiz. Later he unsealed his bill of health and substituted 145 for 144. The last addition to the Ruiz family is a girl.

The Vauban, out of a South American port, docked in Brooklyn early last night. She brought 183 persons in her first cabin and 145 who had third class accommodations.

Supply Company.
Wagoners Oscar E. Ball, John Pettit, Hugh C. Smith, Patrick J. Wren, and William F. Mills.

SUBMARINE LINER NEARLY READY TO ATTEMPT HER DASH

Great Chunks of Rubber and Nickel Packed Into Ribs of Deutschland.

BALTIMORE, July 15.—Great chunks of nickel and rubber have been tucked into the ribs and holds of the German wonder submarine Deutschland. She is nearly ready for her daring venture of the Atlantic mail pouch for shipment to Germany, but reliable information is that she will still be here tomorrow morning and perhaps a little longer.

According to original plans the Deutschland will take on some additional cargo at Norfolk, but this is not altogether certain.

Captain Koenig plans to go to New York tomorrow. He will see Ambassador von Bernstorff, and bring back the diplomatic mail pouch for shipment on the submarine. Whether there is any other than this reason for the journey was not revealed here today.

Slows Up Loading.
Digging up iron balls from the ribbed structure of the submersible freighter to make cargo room, slowed up the loading, but with the stevedores continually at the task there Koenig said, "I'll get out if the English don't violate the three-mile zone law."

Report Doubtful.
One report had it today that the submarine intended to stay here another week. This, however, appeared entirely improbable.

In the first place, delay gives the British more time to strengthen their patrol. Secondly, Manager Hilsen said some days ago the vessel would leave when her cargo is loaded, and lastly, Captain Koenig informed customs officials that he would be in port not over ten days.

Hilsen said today he could not fix a time for her departure. This will be kept as secret as possible, but the best guess seemed still to be that the submarine will head down the bay before Wednesday.

Real Task Then.
Then her real task begins. She undoubtedly will ride the surface to the cape, but afterward she must dodge an allied war vessel cordon, and to do so will require extreme ingenuity. Koenig, however, feels he can get safely back to the fairhaven.

He is telling no one how he intends to fool the allies again. The chances are, however, that he will have to lie on the bottom at his moment of crisis and to a hole in the allied line to take him safely out.

One means of escape for Koenig, mariners say, is to submerge off the cape and hug the three-mile zone for a way, then dashing out where the patrol ends. Apropos of this, Koenig said, "I'll get out if the English don't violate the three-mile zone law."

HARVEY GRATIFIED AT MILITIA REVIEW

Officers Agree Guardsmen
Never Made a Better Showing
Than in Parade.

The review and parade of the District militia on the drill field at Fort Myer yesterday afforded opportunity for the citizen-soldier command to be shown at great advantage, and Gen. William E. Harvey today expressed his gratification over the appearance of the organizations and the effectiveness of the ceremony.

There have been many parades and reviews by the District militia, there are daily affairs at the annual encampments, but it was generally agreed that never before has the citizen-soldier put up a better showing or looked as creditable to the District as it did yesterday.

In New Uniforms.
The militiamen were all attired in their new olive drab uniforms, leggings and shoes and presented a more soldierly bearing than had previously been observed. They marched and drilled with machine-like precision and looked to be a body of men ready to take the field and give a good account of itself.

The technical brigade reviewed by General Harvey consisted of the three battalions of the Third Infantry, commanded by Col. Wendell B. Young, Major Harry H. Young, and his regimental infantry company, commanded by Capt. H. H. Washburn; regimental infantry company, and Vogt; Troop A, First Separate Cavalry, U. S. A., commanded by Major Frenton, Captain Hamilton, and Lieutenant Johnson.

The militia band formed on the right of the drill field and this organization was used as the guide for the alignment of the First, Second, and Third Battalions, in order named. Next came the Regimental Infantry Company, with Troop A, six sections of dismounted artillery from Batteries A and B, two mounted sections of artillery from the batteries, commanded by Lieutenant Mohler, and the two troops of regulars on the left of the line.

Colonel Young formed the regiment and Major Harry Coope formed the technical brigade, bringing the 1,500 men to "present arms" and reporting to General Harvey "Sir, the brigade is formed." At the command "Order arms" from General Harvey, every rifle touched the ground at the same instant.

"Retreat" was then sounded by the field musicians and the sunset gun was fired by the regulars at Fort Myer. The band then played "The Star-Spangled Banner," while every soldier stood at attention.

Following this General Harvey, Colonel Young, Major Coope, and Capt. E. W. Fullam, accompanied by Orderly Jensen, General Harvey's standard-bearer, rode all along the front of the militia to inspect the troops, while Lieut. Col. Antonio Stephen was left in command of the Third Infantry, and General Harvey the other officers having completed the tour of inspection of the front and rear ranks, the review was over.

Several sections of automobiles from Washington rode to the drill field to witness the parade and review, and a large number of men, women and children who rode out on trolley cars occupied seats on the baseball grandstand overlooking the field. The review, however, was disappointing to many of the officers. The spectators made up with enthusiasm for the lack of cheering which they lacked numerically.
